INTRODUCTION

The City of Anaheim has identified the following list of properties as buildings that merit historic designation. There are three different local designations for historic resources in Anaheim:

- I. Contributors to the significance of one of the City's four historic districts: the Colony Historic District, the Five Points District, the Historic Palm District, and the Hoskins District
- II. Citywide Historically Significant Structures
- III. Citywide Structures of Historical Interest

This list indicates both the local designation of each property and any additional Qualified Historic Structure (Q.H.S.) distinctions it has earned, including Mills Act Agreements and inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places.

Please note that inclusion of a property on this list does not guarantee eligibility for a Mills Act Contract. Please contact the City for specific information on the eligibility of a property.

COLONY HISTORIC DISTRICT

The Anaheim Colony Historic District is the city's first and largest historic district, adopted by City Council in October 1997. The boundaries of the Colony match the original German Colony founded in 1857 – North, South, East and West Streets. Over 1,100 qualified structures are located within this 1.8-square mile area. The district reflects the architectural timeline of Anaheim's past, with eclectic styles that include Victorian, Colonial Revival, Craftsman, French, Spanish, English, and Ranch Style.

Buildings located within the Colony Historic District must meet the following conditions to be considered contributors to the significance of the district:

- I. Constructed before 1949, the period of significance for the Colony Historic District
- II. Associated with significant themes identified for the district.
- III. Retaining historic integrity from the period of significance

FIVE POINTS DISTRICT

The Five Points District was adopted by City Council in October 2004 as a historic district to preserve a concentration of architecturally unique and significant homes from about the same era as the Anaheim Colony Historic District. The Five Points Historic District was the next historic district to be established after the original Colony Historic District. Its name is derived from the Five Points street intersection at Lincoln, West, and Center Streets, where the historic Five Points commercial building was originally built. This building has been moved westerly, completely restored and is now home to a Ruby's Deluxe Restaurant and Drive-in.

Buildings located within the Five Points District must meet the following conditions to be considered contributors to the significance of the district:

- I. Constructed between 1941 and 1955, the period of significance for the Five Points District
- II. Associated with significant themes identified for the district.
- III. Retaining historic integrity from the period of significance

HISTORIC PALM DISTRICT

In October 2006, City Council adopted the addition of our third district, the Historic Palm District. The district is named after Palm Street, currently known as Harbor Boulevard, and it fills the gap between North Street and La Palma Avenue north of the Anaheim Colony Historic District. This Historic Palm District has almost 180 contributors that are mostly French, English and Spanish themed.

Buildings located within the Historic Palm District must meet the following conditions to be considered contributors to the significance of the district:

- I. Constructed before 1949, the period of significance for the Historic Palm District
- II. Associated with significant themes identified for the district.
- III. Retaining historic integrity from the period of significance

HOSKINS DISTRICT

The City Council adopted the Hoskins Historic District in December 2008. This is a small neighborhood that was carved from the north end within the original Anaheim Colony Historic District and became its own independent district because it has an intact collection of interesting homes built in the 1940s and 1950s. It represents a more modern era in Anaheim's history immediately following World War II. This district is populated by Ranch style houses that were favored by Anaheim's middle class community leaders during the post-war period.

Buildings located within the Hoskins District must meet the following conditions to be considered contributors to the significance of the district:

- I. Constructed between 1941-1955, the period of significance for the Hoskins District
- II. Associated with significant themes identified for the district.
- III. Retaining historic integrity from the period of significance

CITYWIDE STRUCTURES OF HISTORICAL INTEREST

The City of Anaheim maintains a list of Structures of Historical Interest as a tool for identifying potential historic districts and Historically Significant Structures. These properties are outside of established historic districts and have been identified as resources for understanding the City's historic built environment. While the properties on this list are not Qualified Historic Structures, they are good examples of an identifiable architectural styles and buildings that are associated with the residential, institutional, industrial, or commercial development of Anaheim or the region. Structures of Historical Interest are typically over 50 years old, but structures of less than 50 years old may be added to the list at the Planning Department's discretion if they are exceptionally interesting and merit tracking.
